American Prison Writing Archive

The mission of the American Prison Writing Archive (APWA) is to replace misrepresentation of prisons and imprisoned people with first-person witness by those living in legalized confinement.

No single essay can tell us all that we need to know, but a mass-scale national Archive can begin to strip away widely circulated myths and replace them with a sense of the true human costs of the current legal order. By soliciting, preserving, digitizing and disseminating the work of imprisoned people and volunteers, we hope to ground national debate on mass incarceration in the lived experience of those who know prisons best.

In our current stage of development, our goal is to triple APWA holdings, with particular efforts to expand witness from people in the Archive who are women, gender non-conforming, Spanish speaking, and representative residents from all states and territories. We invite all APWA visitors who are formerly incarcerated, work with or know incarcerated people to help us in increasing contributions that document the prison experience.

The Archive is built on the belief that incarcerated people are always the leading experts on practices and policy of legal confinement's effects. They can offer a generative index of state and civil society's (mis)managing of criminal legal systems and public safety. APWA writers are spokespeople for the challenges, aspirations, hopes, and enduring resistance and resilience of imprisoned people.

Truthout and the Keeley Schenwar Memorial Essay Prize

The Truthout Center for Grassroots Journalism is an independent media outlet that highlights the voices and analysis of incarcerated people to understand the prison industrial complex. They offer an annual prize for incarcerated writers in honor of Keeley Schenwar.

The Keeley Schenwar Memorial Essay Prize is awarded for essays authored by currently incarcerated and formerly incarcerated writers. This program is an effort to uplift the work of authors who've experienced incarceration, and increase opportunities for these writers' narratives to educate the public about the impact of imprisonment and policing.

Each year they award two prizes, each for an original essay of 1,500 words or less on the topic of prisons, policing or a related subject. Essays can be written in the first person and can be personal narratives (although they do not have to be). The prize for each winning essay is $3,000. Essays can be submitted by email (essayprize@truthout.org) or by mail.

PEN America

For more than five decades, PEN America's Prison and Justice Writing program has amplified the work of thousands of writers who are creating while incarcerated in the United States. By providing resources, mentorship, and audiences outside the walls, they help these writers to join and enrich the broader literary community. Committed to the freedom to write in U.S. prisons as a critical free expression issue of our time, they leverage the transformative possibilities of writing to raise public consciousness about the societal implications of mass incarceration and support the development of justice-involved literary talent. There are annual awards with monetary prizes.
